Find out more information a bill introduced by Congressman Steny Hoyer to authorize funding for Full-Service Community Schools , which are public schools that coordinate multiple educational and social service programs with community-based organizations and public/private partnerships.

The Full-Service Community Schools Act (H.R. 2207) builds on the success of Maryland's Judith P. Hoyer Early Child Care and Family Education Centers, or "Judy Centers", which are early education centers for young children. Judy Centers are named after Congressman Hoyer's late wife and educator Judith P. Hoyer. There are currently 24 Judy Centers across the state of Maryland, which have worked with about 8,000 children in 21 counties.
